

3rd Annual
SPIRITUALITY AND HEALTH
SUMMER INSTITUTE
July 25-29, 2011

Interprofessional spiritual care—the assessment, diagnosis, and treatment of patients’ spiritual needs in the context of their physical and emotional needs—is the focus of the 3rd annual Spirituality and Health Care Summer Institute sponsored by the George Washington Institute for Spirituality and Health (GWish).¹

Community of Practice: Physicians, chaplains, nurses, social workers, pharmacists, administrators, educators—everyone working for a better environment for patients, families, and one another.

“Energy, enthusiasm for spiritual care across the spectrum of healthcare professionals.”

Continuing Education: CMEs for physicians, CEUs for nurses, CEs for social workers (applied for from National Association of Social Workers), and a certificate of attendance for chaplains and other participants seeking continuing education credit are included in the registration fee.

Program: Participants work in small interprofessional groups to learn about and practice taking a spiritual history or assessment, and then work together to diagnose spiritual distress and develop treatment plans for cases presented with standardized patients. Participants also explore the role of their own spirituality in the context of their call to serve and patient relationships. Leadership in the integration of spiritual care in outpatient and inpatient clinical settings is addressed with implementation models for clinical settings.

¹ The interprofessional spiritual care model is a process of discovery, collaborative dialogue, treatment, and ongoing evaluation and follow up based on patients’ spiritual needs.
