

Are you a graduate student or academician who wants to make a name in the fields of public health, health communication or social marketing?

Have a captivating case study that you'd like to see published in a peer-reviewed journal?

Contribute to the public health field, get published, and enhance your resume by submitting to Cases in Public Health Communication and Marketing! This is your opportunity!

Cases in Public Health Communication and Marketing is a student-edited, peer-reviewed journal of The George Washington University School of Public Health and Health Services and is currently seeking submissions for Volume 3!

For further details and to check out past volumes, visit www.casesjournal.org.

Cases are written by a student and require collaboration with a faculty adviser and original case practitioner who planned or implemented the initiative profiled in the case.

Remind me...what is a public health case study?

A public health case study is the analysis of a real-world program (health communication or social marketing) that the author has experienced or been able to observe.

A case study accepted for publication will include both a description and original analysis or evaluation of the program or program component.

To be considered for Volume 3, student authors must submit a brief letter of intent by Friday, November 14, 2008 to the journal editors at cases@gwu.edu. The deadline for submissions is Friday, December 19, 2008. The journal is scheduled for publication in June 2009.

Please forward this call for submissions to other interested students, faculty or professionals.

Check out Cases's profile on Facebook!

For author inquiries, please email the journal editors at cases@gwu.edu.